Harvest is now under way of wheat in

Oklahoma with officials and farmers optimistic that the 2012 crop will far surpass last year's drought-ravaged crop.

The 2011 crop was the smallest since the 1950s.

Wheat farmer David Gammill of Chattanooga, Oklahoma says he's getting 30 to 40 bushels per acre after averaging 9 last year.

Gammill said prices are about $6 per bushel - with the break-even point about $5 per bushel.
