

<http://www.KSCBNews.net/news/index.cfm?nk=4573>

Kobach To Outline Voter Fraud Protection Plan

Kansas legislators from both parties are waiting for Secretary of State Kris Kobach to spell out the details of his proposals for combatting election fraud.

But many remain skeptical that fraud is a significant problem in Kansas.

The Republican secretary of state scheduled a Tuesday afternoon news conference to outline what he's calling the proposed Kansas Election Integrity Act.

He has said it will include measures to require voters to show photo identification at the polls and people to provide proof of citizenship when they register to vote for the first time in a new location.

But even GOP legislators who are receptive to those ideas want to scrutinize what Kobach proposes.

Election fraud was the cornerstone of Kobach's successful election campaign last year.